Short Course on Traditional Medicine Development

The Institute of Traditional Medicine (ITM) is mandated to do research in herbal medicine development, which is currently one of the world's prime research areas for development of new pharmaceuticals. In addition ITM is also engaged in formulation of standardized herbal medicines. The demand for the herbal medicines is high, surpassing the production capacity of the Institute's research and development laboratory. In view of such demand, the institute has developed a short course in Traditional Medicine Development which shall encompass training of traditional health practitioners on high quality service delivery and general hygiene in the preparation of herbal medicines. The Institute invites applications for this course for interested individuals. Application forms are available at the Institute and can also be downloaded
